

Construction Begins on the Juniata College Full-Service Research Station

Construction is underway on the first building of a new educational complex: the Juniata College Raystown Field Station. Environmental science students will be able to not only study here, but also live here for an entire semester in the dormitory houses that will be included in the development. This project has the potential of changing the way that environmental science is taught around the country. Although the complex will be constructed using environmentally friendly materials and will offer state-of-the art technology, the original Field Station Farmhouse will remain. The original structure will be available to high school and middle school students for environmental programs. To view the complete Juniata College article and to view an artist's rendering of the complex, click here <http://services.juniata.edu/magazine/spring02/feature1/index.html>